"Think about it, Ed. ... The class Insecta contains 26 orders, almost 1,000 families, and over 750,000 described species — but I can't shake the feeling we're all just a bunch of bugs."

what's begun is done
a marble slate
with cracks ingrain
each dent remain worn and weathered fearing fate
a time will come for it must be done mistakes were made

no stone the same
it deserves a name
the sun has come a body wrung wash away the past that came learn to love another way

Every day it's harder to say bye, harder to get up in the morning, harder to exist in a country that was never built for us. And yet we're supposed to keep going, keep studying, keep pushing like our worlds aren't collapsing. But maybe that's its own kind of resistance. To wake up, to be Latino, to be educated. To be loud in a place that would rather we stay quiet. Every breath, every diploma, every protest, every laugh is a reminder that we're still here. We love. we create. we are the future.

Fuck ICE. Fuck this government. Fuck that fascist in office.

PARA PLANTAR O FUTURO

Pornography is rotten, but there is a small hope

The porn industry is the epitome of the evils of capitalism - prioritizing padded pockets over humanity. “Motivated by profit”, those empty souls in suits turned “a blind eye to [...] victims who communicated [...] that they were deceived and coerced into participating in illicit sexual activity” (1). Without the intervention of third-party organizations, big porn would continue hosting such material without a second thought. The concept of big porn is rotten to the core: it is legalized pimping.

“The erotic – the sensual – those physical, emotional, and psychic expressions of what is deepest and strongest and richest within each of us, being shared: the passions of love, in its deepest meanings.” Audre Lorde

Focusing on pornography as a concept reveals its exacerbation of toxic gender roles and its contradiction with the beauty of intimacy and love. By corrupting sex and emphasizing “sensation without feeling,” pornography denies people, particularly women, the “power of the erotic” (2). By redefining the erotic as an empowering sensation, pornography inherently corrupts and denies human love and connection.

However, I am not naÏve enough to expect the dissolution of pornography. With that expectation in mind, ethical pornography seems to be a framework that allows porn to exist while minimizing the evils that it currently harbors. The first step would be to rid sex work of its taboo nature and negative stigma. Once sex work is recognized as a legitimate profession, the progress towards ethical pornography as the only pornography can begin. Sex workers deserve to be protected by labor laws analogous to those in other industries.

Productivity culture is killing us. Wage labor is violent. Careers are violent. Alarm clocks are violent. Deadlines, commutes, exams, forms — all violent.

Check your schedule. Check your phone. Read your email. Send that text. Pay the bills. Pay attention. I can’t. Fine, take this. Drink this. Wake up. Write this. Read that. Watch this. And this. Now this. Back to work. Get off your phone. Get on it. Get off. On. Off. Get off again. Work. Sleep. Drive. Work. Process. Pay attention. Back to work. Don’t use AI. Use AI. I’m tired. You’re tired. Keep going. Don’t stop. Do not stop. You are useless if you stop, and if you are useless you will never make something of yourself, and that is social death which is real death, and the worst part of this whole nauseating nonstop run-on nightmare is that even in that death, you are not allowed to rest.

But we need rest.

I am referring to real rest — full, truly restorative, deeply pleasurable, blissful, peaceful, present-minded relaxation. Real rest penetrates your body and mind. It is a break from productivity culture. And by “break” I mean separation, not pause.

Why does real rest feel so hard to get? I know why: We are too aware of time. And time — specifically the dominant concept of time as linear and finite — is a mechanism for social control. Productivity, efficiency, hustle, and drive all cease to matter if we stop thinking about time.

True rest requires us to dispense with time as a concept. It’s not about forgetting that time is real; it’s about remembering that it isn’t.

Earlier humans lived closer to nature. Human consciousness experienced “time” as cyclical and everlasting — through sunrises, sunsets, seasons, weather patterns, moon cycles, births, deaths.

Now think: Industrial Revolution. Class wars. Factory floors. Machine pace. Rat race. The commodification of labor — and Frederick Winslow Taylor: Dissecting workers’ bodily movements in the execution of routine tasks allowed FWT to apply unprecedented precision to the labor process. Work faster. Save time. Boost productivity. Up profits. No downtime. No rest. “You’ve got time to lean, you’ve got time to clean” is a modern version of a similar thing. Maximize efficiency. Minimize humanity. Break down tasks. Break down spirts. All hail efficiency. Disembodied severity. Divided wholes. Severed souls. FWT, what the actual fuck. But remember, on some level, time is made up.

And now here is how to be free from time, to feel your best,

to truly, fully rest:

See no clocks, watches, calendars, or numbers on a screen
Just exist, not for purpose; you are valid just for being.

Fall into a flow state doing something you love, build a skill, find true will, or just stare up above.

Get lost in some music, in a book, in the woods,
in a game, in a hobby, or in thought —
There is no “should.”

Have the courage to disconnect from a scarcity mindset.
Be creative because you want to, or do nothing and not mind it.

Let prose turn to poetry
Your fears will dissolve Honor the infinite Maintain your resolve.

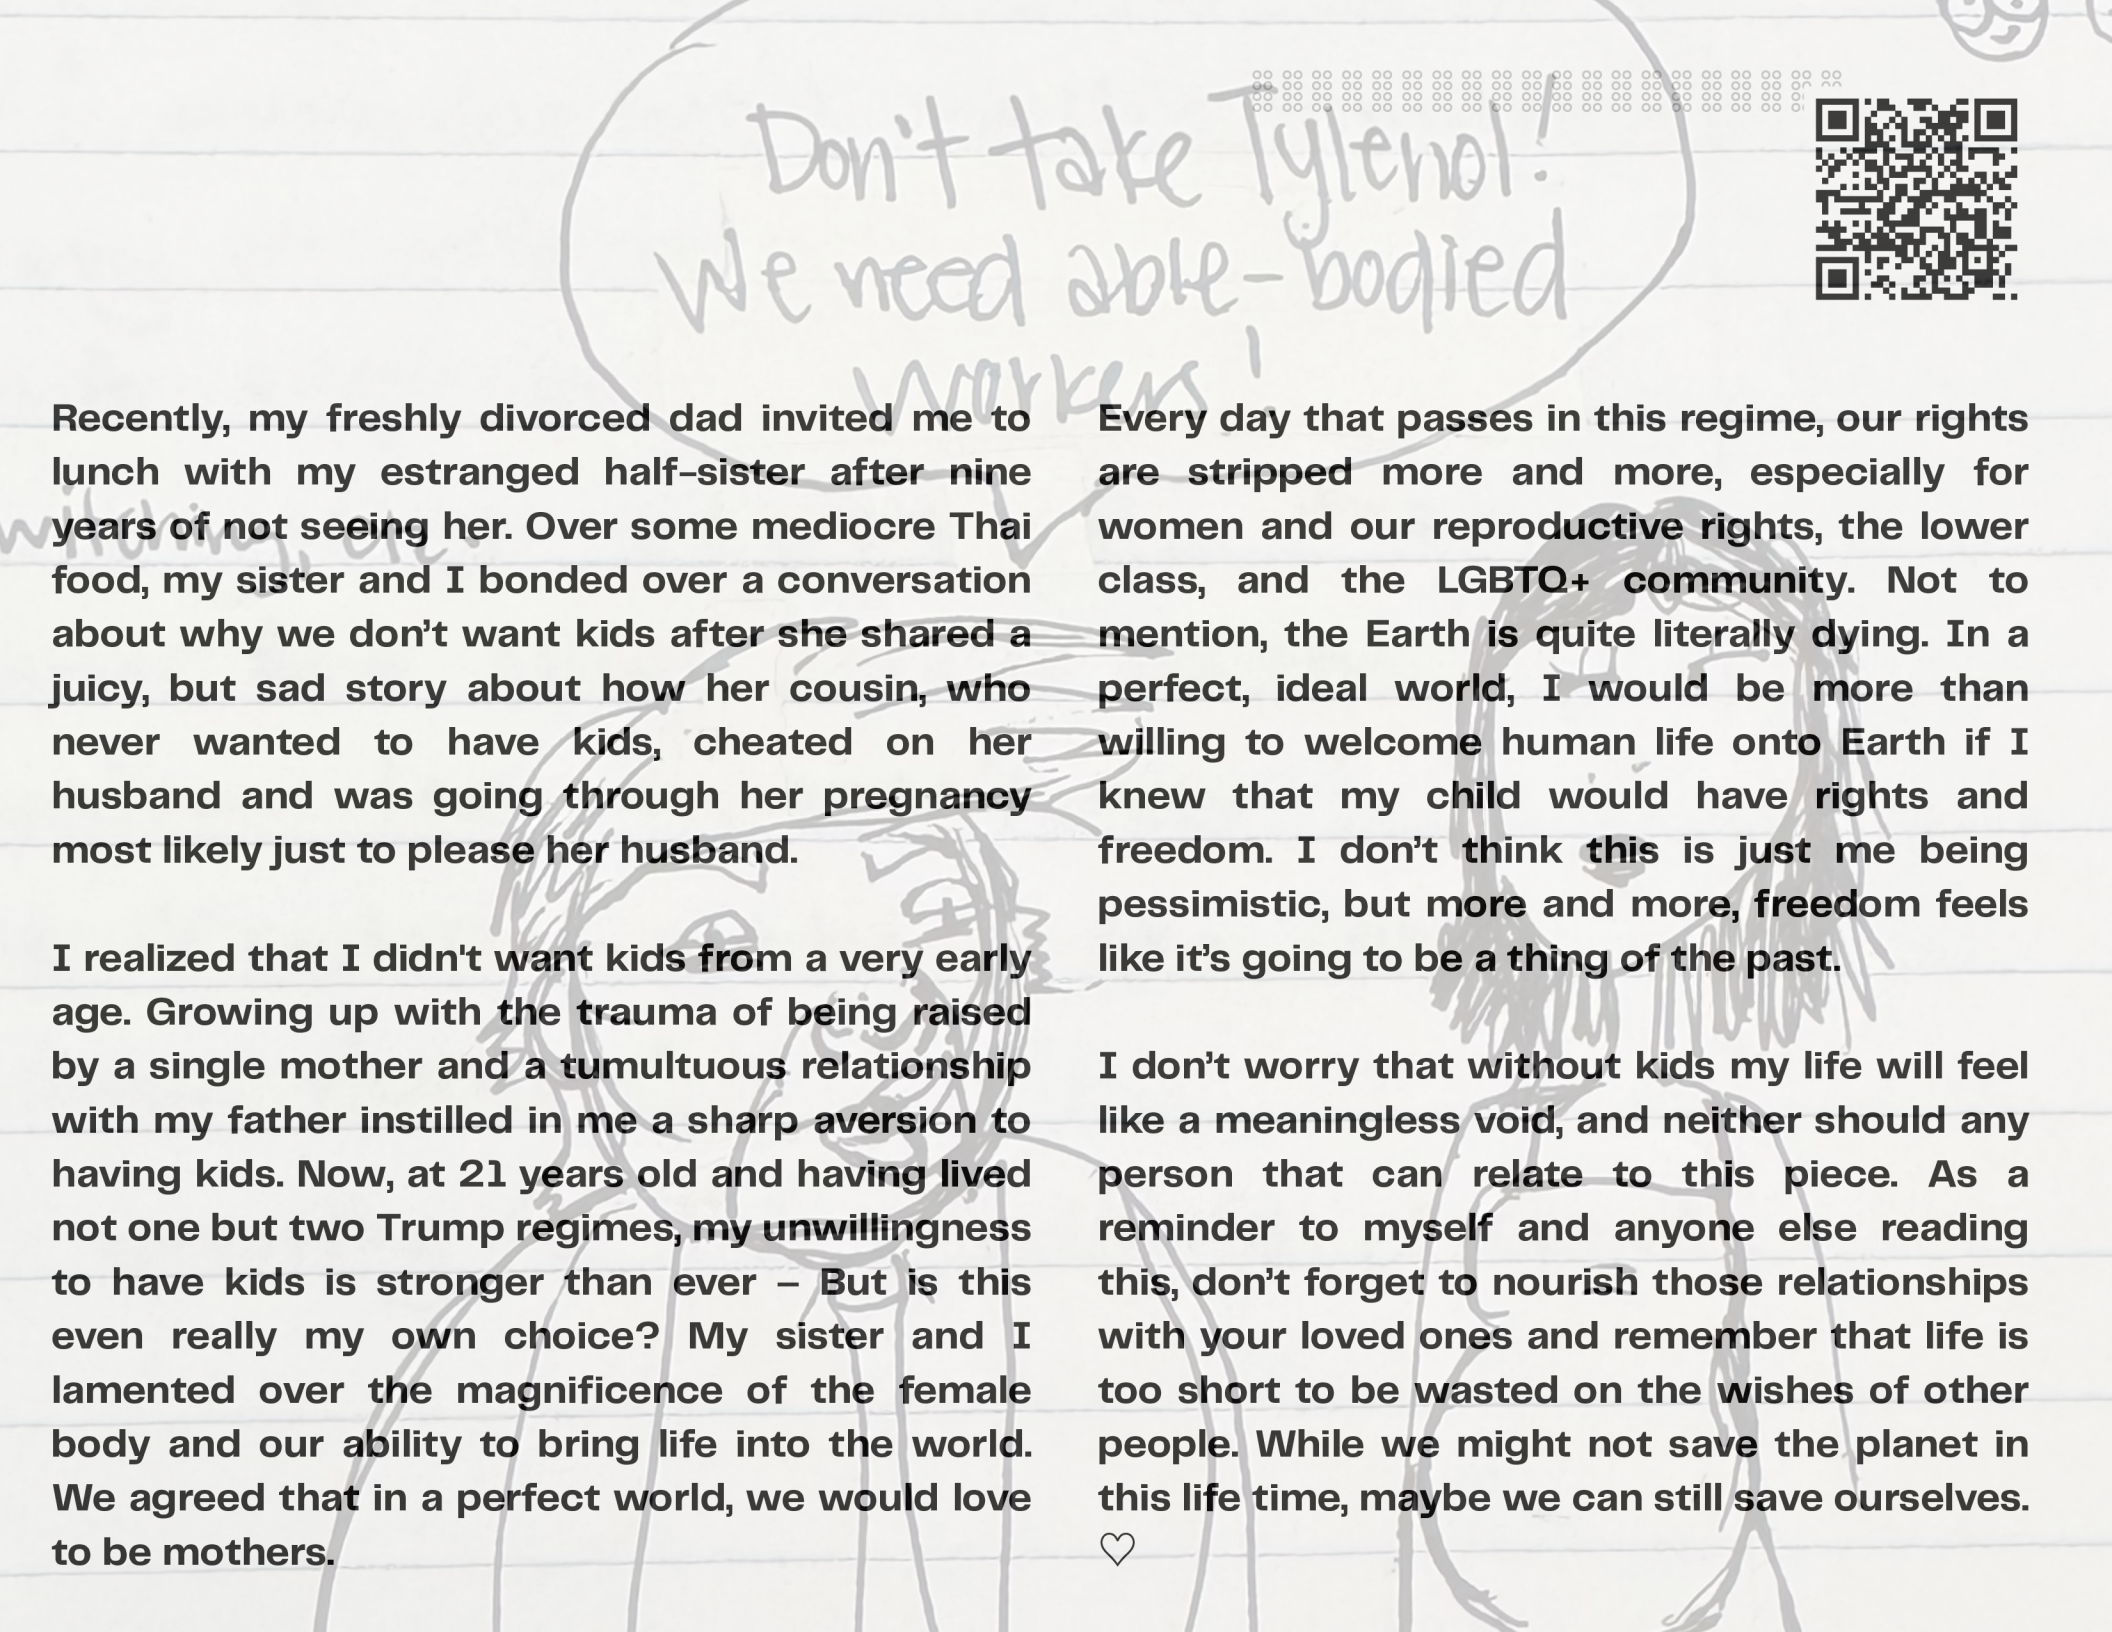
You are entitled to rest.
Time is fake.
Take a stance.
Productivity culture doesn’t stand a fucking chance.



Recently, my freshly divorced dad invited me to lunch with my estranged half-sister after nine years of not seeing her. Over some mediocre Thai food, my sister and I bonded over a conversation about why we don't want kids after she shared a juicy, but sad story about how her cousin, who never wanted to have kids, cheated on her husband and was going through her pregnancy most likely just to please her husband.

I realized that I didn't want kids from a very early age. Growing up with the trauma of being raised by a single mother and a tumultuous relationship with my father instilled in me a sharp aversion to having kids. Now, at 21 years old and having lived not one but two Trump regimes, my unwillingness to have kids is stronger than ever – But is this even really my own choice? My sister and I lamented over the magnificence of the female body and our ability to bring life into the world. We agreed that in a perfect world, we would love to be mothers.

Every day that passes in this regime, our rights are stripped more and more, especially for women and our reproductive rights, the lower class, and the LGBTQ+ community. Not to mention, the Earth is quite literally dying. In a perfect, ideal world, I would be more than willing to welcome human life onto Earth if I knew that my child would have rights and freedom. I don't think this is just me being pessimistic, but more and more, freedom feels like it's going to be a thing of the past.

I don't worry that without kids my life will feel like a meaningless void, and neither should any person that can relate to this piece. As a reminder to myself and anyone else reading this, don't forget to nourish those relationships with your loved ones and remember that life is too short to be wasted on the wishes of other people. While we might not save the planet in this life time, maybe we can still save ourselves. ♡
